FOREWORD

This handbook revises and updates ER H 70-2, The Cuban Economy: A Statistical Review, 1957-68, January 1970. The principal changes are: (a) revision of provisional data for 1968 and addition of data for 1969 and 1970; (b) revision of national accounts back to 1961 based largely on additional information on private consumption as provided by a sampling of refugee family budgets; (c) revision of population and per capita income data based on the Cuban national census of 1970 and new US Bureau of Census estimates; and (d) declassification of all tables except Table 32 covering economic aid from the Communist countries, made possible by acquisition of new data from unclassified sources. Tables covering the government budget have not been updated, because no new information is available.

The handbook is intended to provide a wide range of statistics of general interest on the Cuban economy in a convenient format. Statistics for 1959 and 1960—the two years immediately following the revolution in January 1959—are excluded because of the scarcity and unreliability of information. For similar reasons, the statistics for 1961 are the least reliable of the series shown and should be used with caution. Statistics for 1962 and 1964 generally have been omitted to shorten the tables.

The statistics were obtained from a wide variety of sources. They have been checked carefully for internal consistency and, on the whole, are judged to be reasonably reliable. Most reliable are the statistics on foreign trade, for which cross checks with the statistics of Cuba's trading partners were made.

The production data for most economic sectors also are fairly reliable, those for sugar being the most accurate. The output data for manufactured products also are numerically accurate, but their significance is impaired somewhat by a decline in the quality of many manufactured goods since the revolution. The production data for food crops since the revolution refer only to state collections. In the aggregative measure of agricultural output, however, data on state collections were supplemented by estimates of total food production based mainly on per capita food consumption data provided by refugee reporting.

Drawings on Soviet credits were derived from the commodity trade deficits with the USSR, taking account of estimated Cuban expenditures for invisibles such as the wages of technicians supplied by the USSR, interest payments, and movements of short-term capital. The allocation of drawings between Soviet development aid and balance-of-payments credits, however, is only a rough approximation. Drawings on credits from East European countries were assumed to have occurred within a five-year period of the date of credit extension, unless specific information indicated otherwise.

Estimates of gross national product (GNP) by sector of origin and by expenditure category in current prices were derived from a variety of sources, including estimates of the UN Economic Commission for Latin America that were based on data supplied by the Cuban government. A first approximation of GNP in constant (1957) prices was obtained by constructing volume indexes for each sector of origin. These estimates of GNP were then adjusted on the basis of independent estimates of GNP for 1965-66 by expenditure category in 1957 prices.

In this handbook the term Eastern Europe is used to refer to Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania, and Yugoslavia.

b Figures for some years exceed those reported by Cuba because they have been converted to raw sugar of 96° polarization.

Refined sugar is converted to a raw sugar basis by applying the factor 92 parts refined to 100 parts raw. Because the sugar production data in this table refer to calendar years, they differ in some instances from the data for crop years in Table 6.^e In 1957 and 1961-70, almost all of this category consisted of blackstrap molasses. In 1958, however, about 25% of this category represented rich inverted molasses and a small amount of syrup.

* All data are unclassified. Data for imports are those reported by the importing countries. In most cases, these figures differ little from the export data reported by Cuba which are shown in Table 28. Data for re-exports were estimated as follows: for those countries having net exports of sugar, all sugar imports from Cuba were regarded as re-exported; for those countries having net imports of sugar, all sugar exports were regarded as re-exports and the share of Cuban sugar in these re-exports was estimated as that proportion of the countries' total sugar imports obtained from Cuba. Data for imports are rounded to the nearest 5,000 metric tons and data for re-exports are rounded to the nearest ten thousand metric tons.

^b The official exchange rate is one peso per US dollar.

^c In the case of the USSR, balance-of-payments credits are shown as extended during the period in which the trade deficit to be financed was accumulated and since 1963 include estimated interest accrued on outstanding debt. In some cases, formalization of the credit did not take place until the year following that in which the deficit occurred.
